Rationale:  This scheme develops the students' knowledge and understanding of biographical work and they are introduced to effective techniques to write imaginatively and expressively.  This unit is taught now because it builds nicely on skills they have learned in primary school such as adjectives and verb choices, similes, imagery and tasks which use 'the self' as a relatively 'safe' starting point. It is a good initial opportunity for teachers to get to know their students and helps to explore the notion that our life experiences have a fundamental impact on our own distinct 'literary voice'.		Rationale:  This scheme develops the students' knowledge and understanding of how to analyse a text in detail and think carefully about how perspectives and viewpoints are conveyed in a text both visually and linguistically. Reading for deeper meanings, including the ability to read metaphor and symbolism, is a prerequisite for success in English and is taught here in a challenging yet accessible way.  This unit is taught now because it continues to build upon the concept of narrative voice and identity: How this is defined by our experiences in life as well as our social class. Students are now required to look beyond the self in order to evaluate and critique social behaviour and attitudes. The SOL also encourages a debate around the issue of class and social injustice and also develops students' creative skills: their ability to create multiple characters; the creation of narrative voices and using symbolism for effect.	Rationale:  This scheme develops the students' knowledge and understanding of both the effects of language and the key question – What constitutes a hero? Students will now delve into a range of fiction and non-fiction texts as well as poetry, subsequently shaping their own opinions about true heroic qualities.  This unit is taught now because it offers a return to non-fiction following a fictional unit for balance. Moreover, the notion of heroic and villainous figures in literature and their tendency to appear in all shapes and sizes is a critical concept for students to grasp. It also continues to explore the idea that our identity and principles are shaped by a multitude of factors. Placing this SOL before the study of significant works they will encounter later on means that students have a foundation of knowledge to draw upon in terms of characters, their motives and their development.	Rationale:  This scheme builds upon the very descriptive nature of HT1 but the students are now introduced to a new/ contrasting genre and its conventions, features and tropes. It signals a shift from the personal experience to imagined scenarios.  This unit is taught now because it builds on the descriptive techniques used in HT1 but moves students towards deliberately creating tension, suspense and drama, rather than just reflecting on personal experience. Students should be able to utilise their knowledge of heroic figures and villains and apply these concepts to Gothic characters and settings. Gothic features can be spotted in Victorian Literature and so a firm grasp of these conventions is desirable before students study Oliver Twist and Dickens' craft in Year 8.	Rationale:  This scheme develops the students' knowledge and appreciation of a range of seminal works and offers a strong contrast with the previous half term's learning. Students will study conventions of Shakespeare's comedies, exploring aspects such as character, theme, plot, language and structure that have been introduced during previous Half Terms. The poetry study will allow students to subtly compare and contrast at this stage and will continue to broaden their experience of different writers from varying periods.  This unit is taught now because it will enable students to enjoy a lighter, more enchanting side to Literature to balance their academic diet. This concludes Year 7 by ensuring students have been exposed to a play and a selection of poetry to add to the prose work and variety of genres they have covered thus far. Both Shakespeare and poetry are core texts at GCSE and this is a fitting introduction to the skills needed in the latter years of school. Their Shakespeare journey starts with comedy before exploring tragedy in year 9 and this takes into consideration the growing maturity of students.

Compound-complex sentences, appositive nouns and phrases, conjunctive adverbs, semicolons in lists and between sentences.				Grammar focus: Coherent texts Revision of previous year. Connections between sentences, proofreading, drafting and rewriting
Rationale: This scheme develops the students’ knowledge of social and historical context crucial to the text here but also the wider study of both fiction and non fiction throughout KS3/4. Students will now acquire more formal analysis skills that will eventually lead towards those needed for Lang and Lit Paper 1. The students will be able to compare this work, its characters, features and conventions to genres previously studied and will now be able to explore authorial intent clearly. This unit is taught now because it builds nicely on the knowledge of Gothic literature gained in Year 7 – students will be able to spot patterns/ Gothic features in Victorian Literature and how they are used for similar / different effects. There is also a natural trajectory between ‘imagined’ horrors and harrowing ‘real life’ Victorian experiences explored by Dickens and other writers –a thread which continues later in Year 9 in the final term. Having already explored the notion of heroism, students will also be able to explore the heroic and villainous characters of the novel and make subtle links with other characters (real life and literary) of a similar ilk that they have encountered to date.				Rationale: This scheme develops the students’ knowledge and understanding of plays / modern drama and the techniques employed by playwrights for dramatic effect. They will develop the learning on plot, character, context and language that was initiated by their study in Yr 7 HT5 + HT6. This unit is taught now in order to offer a balanced diet of prose and drama which is essential for KS3 learners. The dramatic content moves learners on from Comedy in Year 7 to Drama in Year 8 and this is followed by Tragedy in Year 9. This takes into account the developing maturity of students and should allow for increasingly challenging and stimulating debate. It also exposes students to a Russell play which is similar in thematic content to the one studied at GCSE (Blood Brothers) and deliberately continues with the exploration of the hardships of poverty by considering how Dickens and Russell both hint at similar forms of social injustice despite writing in different centuries.		Rationale: This scheme develops the students’ knowledge and understanding of non-fiction writing techniques. They learn about the importance of purpose and audience and get to experiment with techniques and vocabulary to make their writing engaging and entertaining – all whilst exploring the importance of ‘broadening horizons.’ This unit is taught now to offer a contrast with the fictional nature of the previous two half term’s work and to help students develop the functional writing skills they will eventually need to be successful in GCSE paper 2. This unit fits aptly after ‘Our Day Out’ and will give many the opportunity to make the link between travel, culture, experience and the social and economic boundaries explored in the play.		Rationale: This scheme develops the students’ knowledge of canonical and modern writers who have contributed to this fascinating genre and allows them to explore why the genre has been and continues to be so popular. This is another opportunity for students to make the link between text, context and authorial intent by exploring a range of writers and ground-breaking texts and also allows students to trace how and why the genre has changed over the years. This unit is taught now as it allows students to continue to explore places and experiences which are different from their own. It deliberately marks a shift from real places to imagined futures and challenges students to be creative in their thinking. In part, it also allows an exploration of the consequences of failing to appreciate and look after the planet – something that is clearly explored in the previous HT.		Rationale: This scheme develops the students’ knowledge and understanding of how to form an effective argument. Students will learn about the structure of a formal debate; will develop their use of persuasive techniques in their writing and will enhance their oracy through class / wider presentation. This unit is taught now because it offers a return to non-fiction following a fictional unit for balance. The students will be able to look for some of the techniques they will have covered in HT4 when exploring Travel, but the vocabulary and subject matter is now more intense and emotive to work in additional challenge. These skills are gradually building students towards what they need for Language Paper 2 at GCSE. Moreover, students have now had good coverage of a number of topics that have allowed them to express views and opinions; they have also shaped their ability to write non-fiction texts in a purposeful and engaging manner. This is now a good opportunity for them to work on their spoken, presentational skills - a key component of GCSE English Language. This SOL builds upon the content of HT 5 as part of the focus of the debate is always on ‘thinking/looking forward into the future’.

Rationale: The unit develops the descriptive and narrative skills established in Year 7 HT1 and 2 and Year 8 HT1 by considering the impact of juxtaposition and different narrative styles / structures when writing a full short story. Students are now required to compare poems, by considering linguistic and structural devices for effect. Content and themes now reflect the maturity of the students. The unit is taught here because the theme of external and internal conflict runs throughout the following term's coverage and helps to prepare students for the thematic study of their GCSE Literature texts (especially 'Power and Conflict' poetry cluster). It also coincides with the school's recognition of Armistice Day.	Rationale: This unit develops students' understanding of and passion for Shakespeare's play (Year 7 HT 5/6), this time focusing on the conventions of a tragedy. There is a return to the consideration of patriarchal societies and the role of women, with a sharper focus this time on whether parental control is a good or a bad thing. Students are required to apply their prior experiences and knowledge of conflict (HT1) to a different form of text. The unit is taught here because it allows students to study Shakespeare every two years, this time tackling more mature concepts and themes. Moreover, its central themes lend themselves well to the exploration of 'Of Mice and Men' and 'Suffering and Survival' in the final term.	Rationale: This unit develops the students' love of seminal world literature and how it is shaped by the society in which it is written. Students develop their appreciation of symbolism (Year 8 HT2) as well as the power of allegory within Literature for polemical means. Non-fiction reading skills are developed now by analytically comparing writers' attitudes across different time periods. The unit is taught here because it provides students with a knowledge of historical racism, sexism and social injustice – all core concepts in many of the texts studied at GCSE. This furthermore provides staff with the opportunity to make links between 1930s America and current world affairs such as the BLM / Me Too movements.
